> Last summer, Derin visited her aunt Nesrin in Mardin. On her second day, her aunt said, “Today we are making sembusek, a special Mardin dish.” Derin had never heard of it. First, they made a dough with flour, water, a little oil and salt. Aunt Nesrin showed Derin how to knead it: she pressed it with her hands, folded it and pressed it again for ten minutes until it was soft. Then they chopped onions, parsley and peppers and mixed them with minced meat and spices. After that, they rolled the dough into thin circles, put the filling on one half and closed them like half moons. Finally, they took the sembuseks to the stone oven at the bakery near the house. “My grandmother taught me this recipe when I was your age,” her aunt said. When Derin tasted it, she couldn’t believe how delicious it was. Now she wants to make it for her parents in Ankara.
