1. PHONE-FREE SATURDAYS Last spring, five friends from Bursa noticed something strange: they were spending about six hours a day on their phones, even when they were together. “We were sitting in the same café, but nobody was talking,” says Elçin, fifteen. So they started a club called “Phone-Free Saturday”. The rule is simple: every Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., they unplug. They leave their phones at home and meet in Kültürpark. At first, Rüzgar thought the idea was ridiculous. “I was sure I would get bored in ten minutes,” he laughs. But now he is the most active member. The group plays board games, flies kites, cooks together at a friend’s house and sometimes visits the city museum. Today the club has twenty-two members. “I still love my phone,” says Elçin, “but I prefer real conversations to messages now.”

   Why did the young people start the “Phone-Free Saturday” club?
