1. Last February, fourteen-year-old Ozan and his father went up the mountain near their village in Erzurum. Some of their sheep were missing, and they wanted to find them before dark. The weather forecast said there would be light snow, but suddenly a heavy snowstorm started. They couldn’t see the path, so his father decided to wait in an old stone hut. Ozan was scared, but he remembered his emergency training at school. They had a small backpack with water, chocolate, a flashlight and a whistle. Ozan sent their location to his mother when he found a weak phone signal. Every ten minutes, he blew the whistle. After five hours, a rescue team heard it and found them. The next morning, the team also found most of the sheep safe in a valley. “I will never go up the mountain without our emergency bag again,” Ozan says. “If you are prepared, you will survive.”
