> Selma Ergin is the presenter of "Good Morning, İzmir", a live morning show on a local channel. Her day starts very early. She wakes up at five o'clock, has a quick breakfast and leaves home at half past five. A driver takes her to the studio, and she always reads the newspapers in the car because she needs to know the latest news before the show.
> At the studio, she meets the director and they talk about the guests. Then she goes to make-up. The show starts at seven, and it is on air for two hours. Selma talks to a doctor, a chef or a musician every morning, and she reads messages from the audience.
> Live TV is not always easy. Last Monday, a guest was late because of the traffic, so Selma talked about the weather for ten minutes! "I was a bit nervous," she says, "but the audience loved it." Selma prefers live shows to recorded programmes because they are more exciting. "Every morning is different," she says. "That's why I love my job."
