> Last Monday, Nisa Kaplan, a 7th grader from Bolu, became the “Mayor for a Day”. She won a city competition with her idea: a children’s library on wheels that visits villages without a library. Her day started at half past eight at the city hall. The real mayor showed her his office and explained his job. At ten o’clock, Nisa attended a meeting with engineers. They talked about a new bridge over the river, and Nisa asked a lot of questions. “Will the bridge be safe for bikes?” she asked. The engineers promised to add a bike lane.
> After lunch, they visited the fire station to thank the firefighters, because they worked very hard during a forest fire near Lake Abant last summer. Then they went to the municipal library to read stories to young children.
> At the end of the day, the mayor had good news for Nisa. “We will start your library bus project next year,” he said. Nisa smiled. “I went to the city hall to be a mayor for a day,” she said, “but I came home with a dream that will come true.”
