City break or countryside? We asked two travellers.
Oya: I love urban holidays. Last spring I went to İstanbul for a week. I visited museums, art galleries and historic sites like Hagia Sophia. The city is noisy and crowded, but there is always something to do. I prefer cities to villages because I get bored easily.
Levent: I'd rather spend my holidays in the countryside. I have never stayed in an all-inclusive resort, and I don't want to! Last summer, I stayed on a farm in Kırklareli. I fed the animals, picked fruit and went fishing in a quiet lake. The air was fresh and the nights were silent. To me, rural holidays are more relaxing.

In the Ateş family, everybody has a job at home. Mrs Ateş works at a hospital, and she has night shifts twice a week. On those days, Mr Ateş is in charge of cooking dinner. Fourteen-year-old Selim is responsible for taking out the garbage and loading the dishwasher every evening. He doesn't mind these chores, but he can't stand ironing!
His sister, Ezgi, is eleven. She has to make her bed every morning and feed their cat, Zeytin. On Saturdays, the whole family cleans the house together. They put on music and divide the jobs. 'I don't like it when my brother leaves his socks everywhere,' Ezgi says, 'but it's fun when we work as a team.'

2. What chores is Selim responsible for?

3. What does Ezgi have to do every morning?
