EVENING NEWS — FLOOD IN THE WESTERN BLACK SEA

Heavy rain hit the western Black Sea region last week. It rained for almost two days without a break, so the small Kuruçay stream turned into a dangerous river. On Thursday night, water entered more than forty houses in Yeşilköy village. Rescue teams worked all night with boats and helped the villagers to leave their homes. Luckily, nobody died, but many families lost their furniture and some animals.

Experts say the flood was serious for two reasons. First, the rain was much heavier than normal because of climate change. Second, the stream bed was full of rubbish, and some people built houses very close to the water. “If people keep building near rivers, floods will be more dangerous in the future,” says engineer Burcu Demir. She also says villages should have early warning systems so that families can leave before the water arrives.
