17. Every summer, sea turtles come to some quiet beaches on the Mediterranean coast to lay their eggs in the sand. About two months later, the baby turtles come out and walk to the sea at night. They find the sea by following the light of the moon on the water. That’s why bright lights from hotels and restaurants are dangerous: the babies walk towards the lights instead of the sea. Every year, volunteers from different countries work on these beaches. They find the nests, put a small fence around them and ask people not to use umbrellas or lights near them.
