17. Last month, our school organised a career day. Professionals from different fields came to talk about their jobs. The most popular speaker was Ms. Arslan, a marine biologist. She explained that she spends about four months a year on research ships, collecting samples from the sea floor. The rest of the year she works in a laboratory and writes reports. She admitted that the job is not always exciting: “Sometimes I look at the same data for weeks,” she said. However, she believes that protecting the oceans is worth the effort. She advised students who are interested in this career to study biology and chemistry and to learn to swim well. Several students, including my friend Kerem, said that the talk had changed their plans for the future.
