17. Over the past decade, streaming platforms have changed the way people watch films. Instead of going to the cinema, millions of viewers now prefer to watch new releases at home, often on the same day they come out. Some experts predicted that this trend would lead to the end of traditional cinemas. However, recent figures suggest otherwise. While the number of cinema visits did fall sharply for a few years, it has started to rise again, particularly among young people. Many of them say that watching a film on a giant screen with a crowd of strangers is an experience that cannot be recreated at home. As a result, some cinemas are now investing in more comfortable seats, better sound systems and special events to attract audiences.
