17. When people travel abroad, they often worry about language barriers, but cultural differences in manners can cause just as much confusion. In some countries, for example, finishing all the food on your plate shows that you enjoyed the meal, while in others it suggests that your host did not give you enough to eat. Similarly, making eye contact is seen as a sign of honesty in many Western cultures, yet in parts of East Asia, looking directly at an older person for a long time may appear disrespectful. Experts say the safest approach is to observe what local people do and follow their example. Most hosts, they add, will forgive small mistakes if they can see that a visitor is genuinely trying to respect their customs.
