> Last year, a group of tenth graders in Eskişehir noticed that their school canteen threw away a lot of food every day. They decided to start a project. First, they measured the waste for two weeks. Then they put posters in the canteen asking students to take only what they could eat. They also collected fruit and vegetable peels and turned them into compost for the school garden. After three months, the food waste had decreased by about a third. The students now grow tomatoes and herbs with the compost, and other schools in the city want to copy their idea.

1. What did the students notice?

   a) Their school wasted a lot of food.
   b) Their school had no garden.
   c) Their classroom was too cold.
   d) Their bus was always late.

2. What did they do with the food waste?

   a) They threw it away.
   b) They turned it into compost.
   c) They sold it.
   d) They gave it to the canteen.

3. How much did the food waste decrease?

   a) By ten percent
   b) By half
   c) By about a third
   d) It didn’t change.
