Imagine waking up on the Moon in the year 2070. You look out of the window and see the Earth, a blue and white ball in the black sky. This may sound like science fiction, but several space agencies are already planning permanent bases on the Moon.
Life there will not be easy. There is no air to breathe, and temperatures change from extremely hot to extremely cold. For this reason, the first homes will probably be built underground or covered with thick layers of Moon soil. Scientists also hope to find ice near the Moon’s south pole, because ice can give astronauts drinking water and even fuel for rockets.
Some experts believe that a Moon base will be the first step towards Mars. Others think we should spend the money on solving problems on Earth first. Either way, the next fifty years of space exploration will be very exciting.

   b) To see the Earth better
   c) To protect people from harsh conditions

3. Why is ice important?

   a) It makes the Moon beautiful.
   b) It can provide water and fuel.
   c) It keeps homes cold.
   d) It is used to build homes.

4. According to some experts, a Moon base ___.

   a) is impossible to build
