3 × 5 = 15 puan

Read the passage and answer the questions. (Parçayı okuyun ve soruları cevaplayın.)

> Psychologists who study friendship distinguish between friendships of convenience and close friendships. The first type is based on shared circumstances: we become friendly with classmates, colleagues or neighbours because we see them every day. Such relationships are pleasant, but they often fade when circumstances change, for example when someone moves to another city.
>
> Close friendships, on the other hand, are built on trust and emotional support, and they can survive distance and time. Interestingly, researchers estimate that most adults have only a handful of truly close friends. Social media may have increased the number of people we are connected to, but it has not necessarily increased the number of people we can call at three in the morning.
