> The Lycian Way is a long walking path in the south of Turkey. It goes from near Fethiye to near Antalya and it is more than five hundred kilometres long. Last April, my cousin Ozan and I walked a part of it for six days. We carried big backpacks with tents, sleeping bags and food. The path was difficult in some places. We climbed steep hills and walked on rocky roads. But the views were incredible. On one side there was the blue sea, and on the other side there were pine forests. We saw ancient tombs and ruins of old cities. At night, we camped near small villages. The villagers were very friendly and gave us fresh bread and honey. It was the best adventure of my life.
