> Two years ago, my parents decided to leave Istanbul and move to a village near Bolu. At first, I was angry. I missed my friends, the shopping malls and the cinema. Life in the city was fast and exciting. In the village, everything was slow and quiet. There was only one small shop, and the bus to the town came twice a day. But slowly, I started to enjoy my new life. The air is clean and fresh, and at night I can see thousands of stars. We grow our own vegetables and we have chickens. My father works online, and my mother opened a small café for hikers. Of course, village life has some problems, too. The winters are long and the internet is sometimes slow. But I am healthier and calmer now.
