In Turkey, a cup of coffee is never just a drink. It is a reason to sit down, talk and spend time together. Turkish coffee is prepared in a special way. Very finely ground coffee, cold water and, if you like, sugar are put into a small pot called a cezve. The coffee is heated slowly until a thick foam rises. It is then poured into small cups and served with a glass of water and often a piece of Turkish delight. The grounds are not filtered, so they settle at the bottom of the cup. You should drink slowly and stop before you reach them! Coffee also plays a role in traditions. When a family visits a girl’s home to ask for her hand in marriage, she traditionally makes coffee for the guests. Some brides-to-be playfully add salt to the groom’s cup to test his patience. After drinking, some people turn their cups upside down and try to tell fortunes from the shapes left by the grounds. In 2013, UNESCO added Turkish coffee culture and tradition to its list of the Intangible Cultural Heritage of Humanity. A well-known Turkish saying explains why: one cup of coffee is remembered for forty years.
