> Last year was supposed to be my best season. I was the captain of my school volleyball team, and we had a real chance of winning the regional championship. Then, three weeks before the first match, I landed badly after a jump and injured my knee. The doctor told me I would need an operation and at least six months of rest. I was devastated. For the first few weeks, I stayed at home and felt sorry for myself. I didn't want to see my teammates because watching them train made me feel even worse. My mood changed thanks to my coach. She visited me and asked me to help her during matches. At first I refused, but finally I agreed. Sitting on the bench, I started to notice things I had never seen as a player: how the other team moved, where the empty spaces were, and when my teammates lost concentration. I shared my ideas, and our team reached the final. We didn't win, but I learned that a hard time can teach you something valuable. Now I am back on the court, and I think I am a better player and a better captain.
