> Hande is a nurse at a busy hospital in Ankara. She works in the emergency department. Her shift starts at eight in the evening and finishes at eight in the morning, so she works at night three times a week. When she arrives, she talks to the day nurses about the patients. Then she checks each patient, gives them their medicine and writes notes. The emergency department is never quiet. Ambulances bring people with injuries, high fevers or heart problems. Hande must work fast and stay calm. “The hardest part is seeing people in pain,” she says, “but the best part is seeing them go home healthy.” After work, Hande is very tired. She has breakfast, takes a shower and sleeps until the afternoon.
