> My grandfather started school in 1962 in a village near Sivas. There was only one classroom for all five grades, and one teacher taught everyone. He used to walk four kilometres to school, even in the snow. The students used to bring wood for the stove in winter. There weren't any computers, of course, and books were very precious. Today, I go to a high school with fifteen classrooms, two computer labs and a library. I have a different teacher for every subject. My grandfather says students today are lucky, and I agree, but he also says students used to be more patient.
