> It was raining heavily when Hakan woke up at 3 a.m. He heard a strange noise and looked out of the window. The river behind the village had overflowed, and water was rushing into the streets. He woke his parents and his little sister, and they quickly climbed onto the roof of their two-storey house. They waited there in the cold rain for nearly five hours. Finally, a rescue team arrived in a boat and took them to a school building on the hill. Their house was badly damaged, but nobody in the family was hurt. “We lost our furniture,” Hakan says, “but we learned that what really matters is each other.”
