D Values across generations

Read the text and answer the questions. (Metni okuyun ve soruları cevaplayın.)

> A recent survey asked people from three generations which values they consider the most important. Grandparents mostly chose respect for elders, hard work and loyalty to family. Their children, today’s parents, put honesty and education at the top of the list. Teenagers, on the other hand, chose freedom of expression, fairness and protecting the environment. Interestingly, all three generations agreed on one value: honesty. Researchers say that values change with social and technological conditions, but some core values are shared by everyone. Understanding these differences can help families communicate better and reduce conflicts at home.
